Description: When James Gurneys Dinotopia: A Land Apart from Time first appeared in 1992, it was immediately hailed as a fully imagined world of the caliber of J. R. R. Tolkiens. Gurneys premise — of an undiscovered island where a race of mystical humans co-exists in harmony with intelligent dinosaurs — has been since reiterated over and over in numerous films...

Review: This is an old favorite. I love dinosaurs, and seeing them live with humans drove my imagination. I say that there was some violence, but it was exceedingly light. I doubt it would be an issue. Basically, one of the characters injures a dinosaur at the beginning, not knowing it is friendly. It isnt graphic, or over played, it is just part of the story....
